

Write Your Rulebook for Family Exits

Write the rulebook while you still have the power to ensure your experience, knowledge and wisdom is transferred.

---

You've completed your estate plan.

You've developed tax strategies.

You have a succession plan.

Congratulations!

But, have you written Your Rulebook for Family Exits? If not, your children may face an uncertain future, and your legacy may be endangered.

Some children are interested in managing the family business, while others may want to exit once Mom and Dad are gone. If there are no clear rules for these exits, your children may disagree.

At Ben-Jac Capital Inc., we help business owners, while they are still in control of their company, to create the rulebook for family exits. Clear guidelines are established, regarding how much exiting children will receive, if they want to sell their shares and how this transaction will be structured.

Our clients have discovered that a rulebook, for family exits, is a great gift to the next generation. To paraphrase Warren Buffet: Leave your children enough to do what they want, but not enough to do nothing.

Experience has shown that families with a rulebook for family exits are more likely to stay together in the business, and less likely to exercise their option to exit.

If family exits are not planned and funded, family disharmony may result.

Experience has shown that families with clear, manageable, and properly funded exit strategies are more likely to stay together in the business and less likely to exercise their option to exit.
